

My representation was not one of the above 3 listed representations. My representation had both a hashset of edges and nodes being tracked at all times. I chose to use this representation because of the advantages it provides. This representation is advantageous because it separates nodes and edges, allows efficient lookup, is very flexible in how I can implement functions, and finally prevents duplicates from being added into either set.